WONDERFUL LURAY.

A MAGNIFICENT CAVE IN VIRGINIA.

Visit to the Great Curiosity Graphically Described-What Marvelous Things Can Be Seen in the Cave-The Country Surrounding It-The Attractions.

The distance from Washington to Luray is about 125 miles and the running time about five hours. As it is approached the mountain peaks grow more rugged and majestic, and the railroad track, as if in imitation, runs over a more rugged bed, and for majesty mounts on tall trestle-works Witch Hazel and Glycerine that make the nervous passenger wish he was safe on terra firma and wonder whether his ticket entitles him to serial flights of this kind. The town of Luray is beautifully situated on the slope of the mountain, within plain sight of Stony Man mountain, within plain sight of Stony Man Mountain, said to be one of the highest points in Virginia. Its houses straggle along one steep street, a part of the excellent Culpeper pike-a former famous highway for transportation during war times. To the east lies the Blue Ridge, and it stretches away to the southward till lost in the dim distance, and in the west the Massanuttan Mountains shut out the natural horizon. Of the town itself little can be said in its favor. The geoogleal stratum of this region is limestone, which, being readily dissolved by water containing carbonic acid percolating through it, is the natural material for the formation of caves.

THE COUNTRY SURROUNDING LURAY is filled with many small caverns that have been known for years, varying in size from a few feet to many yards in extent, which are said to have been utilized during the war as hiding-places by runaway slaves and men wishing to escape enlistment. About two years ago some wide-awake citizens of Luray, with an eye for a rather unique speculation, formed themselves into a company for the purpose of tapping the earth at points where the indication of caves appeared favorable. They methodically set to work, and, after repeated failures, their efforts were successful. The discovery of the present cave was not, therefore, the result of pure accident, but of a determined effort to uncover the secrets of nature. The credit of the discovery belongs to Andrew and William Campbell, two genial and enterprising gentlemen, and it is to their efforts that the developments afterward made are open to the public to-day. Campbell and his associates, after discovering the cavern and partly exploring its vast extent, went quietly at work to buy the Broaddus property, on which the cave was found, and the pers. pamphleis, briefs, records, reports, &c., exesale was made to them at $17 an acre. They were HAPPY IN THEIR BONANZA and saw "millions in it," when their bright dream was disturbed by a lawsuit in behalf of Broaddus asking to have the sale set aside on various technical grounds, the immense value of the property concealed beneath the rocky pasture-ground having leaked out. The first suit for the contested right resulted in the success of the Campbells, but, on appeal, the decision was reversed and the Broaddus "managers" were put in possession of the property. A few weeks ago the cave was sold to a joint-stock company for $40,000, and the Campbells. who thought themselves the owners, have the doleful satisfaction of being mere hirelings to look | will break ground soon. after it. The arched walls were | for this paper. hung with hundreds of stalactites glistening in the light, while from the centre hung one far longer than the rest, which had been cleverly utilized as a chandelier, from the point of which was hung a circle bearing twenty candles. No conscientious correspondent will pretend that he is adequate to the task of describing the marvels of beauty that burst upon him at every step he takes from the beginning to the end of his rambles through this enchanted place, nor even give a bare conception of the fascination of the MARVELOUS SCENE.

In striving to give a glimpse of this fairy-haunted realm, exaggeration seems impossible, and cool description would be mean the subject. The mildest flight of the imagination could scarce conjure up the fantastic shapes that drops of limewater, falling for ages and ages, have solidified into rock. As Schlegel said of some delicately-chiseled stone tracery in a Gothic cathedral, here, truly, is "frozen music." When the spirit of the place has once seized on one's imagination it is easy to believe that all the old fairy tales of eives and hobgoblins and mermaids sporting in earal grottoes are veritable facts. Macbeth's witches could have held high revel in the gloomy depths of Pluto's Chasm, and the fairies of

"MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM" might have quenched their thirst in the Imperial spring or danced in Oberon's Grotto, so suggestive of the supernatural and the mystic are all the surroundings. Near the centre of the grand entrance rises the majestic Washington pillar, a massive foundation fourteen feet across and thirty feet high. From this point galleries shoot off in various directions, and the observer is bewildered by the thousands of lights that sparkle in the vistas that meet his eyes. A narrow defile leads down to the "Flower Garden," where the stalagmites blossom into buds, tendrils, vines, and roses in innumerable variations. Diana's Bath is a superb recess in the rocks. filled with pure limpid water, well worthy of the "Huntress chaste and fair," after whom it is named. The ball room is a beautifully formed chamber, with arched walls, STUDDED WITH PENDANT STALACTITES. while close by nature, in a freak of blue Presbyterian austerity, has planted the counterpart of a ghostly cemetery, whose grim head-stones, placed in rows, point a painful moral to counteract the giddiness of terpsichore. The Frozen Fountain and Brand's Cascade are perfect imitations in glistening white limestone of the foam and bubbles of flowing water. As though tired of counterfeiting the grand and beautiful of the upper earth, the stalactites in the Fish Market represent a stall with herring hung side by side. In various places heads of animals, more or less exact, can be discerned. As we pass on, new wonders reveal themselves. Vast forests of leafless trees spring into view, colonnades in blue, buff, and white, mounds of silver and bronze, richly-carved pillars and pedestals, groups of marble and alabaster statuary, columns formed like Chinese pagodas, towering spires, forts, and eastles in picturesque ruins, and an endless variety of shapes that have no counterpart in the world which the sun shines upon. The cathedral is worthy to be the gothic

Cologne where the SUBTERRANEAN GODS may be worshipped by their devotees. Scores of candles lit up the grotto at the end, giving the appearance of an altar at high mass. Close at hand is the organ of the sanctuary, founded by the stalactites descending in pipes of graduated scale, which are actually attuned to some extent in harmony with the laws of musical sound, and, on being struck, give forth resonant chords. The angel's orderly conduct. Wing, of pure white alabaster, hangs gracefully poised from a massive column. The conventional idea of a stalactite is that of a sharp-point limestone icicle, but here all conventional ideas are broken in pieces, for in a curious formation, to horizontal instead of a vertical line of development, which extends until it can be free to move

> Rival Bowen Delegations. There was an amusing scene at the White House yesterday when three rival Bowen delegations arrived on the field almost simultaneously and commenced to manœuvre for the precedence in getting a hearing with the President. One batch grouped themselves in the corridor opposite the door of the President's office, the second the third party circulated around generally and he attempts a poetical flight he winds up with a two delegations. The rivals eyed each other suspiciously as they jostled on the stairs, and exerscenre precedence.

THE STAR-ROUTE JURIES.

Names of Grand and Petit Jurors for the Coming Term of the Criminal Court. The grand and petit jurors for the June term of the Criminal Court, which will be convened by Judge George L. Sheriff, 1114 Pennsylvania avenue; Cox on the 20th instant, were drawn to-day in the office of the clerk of the court. It is more than probable that the star-route investigation will be before the be before the petit jurors of this term, which may be protracted till December next.

We clip the above from the Evening Star in order to preserve its head-line, "The Star-Route Juries." The point to which we wish to call the attention of the public is the head-line, "The Star-Route Juries," which forms the eaption of the jury-list This designation, in view of recent newspaper utstreets; M. Williams, 1306 Fourteenth street north- terances sent forth from the Star Chamber, Room The rooms occupied by the Marshal at west; T. J. Fisher, 1223 F street northwest; W. No. 59, Post-Office Department, would seem to inmanipulated in the interest of the detectives, in- being distributed to the commercial newspapers to defame by Star Chamber proceedings. We denounce the above intimation as a vile slander upon the character of the men drawn vesterday in a regular manner from the jury-box. To thus insinuate by covert innuendo that the names drawn reflect the wishes of the detectives, informers, and spies who manipulate the Star Chamber is a base attack upon the integrity, independence, and judgment of the jurors named. The jury was drawn for the purpose of exercising their legal functions without regard to the star-route slanders made notorious through the morbid press by scandal furnished by Detectives Gibson & Co., any more than any other matters properly brought to their Plumbers in Consultation with the attention, and the jury was not drawn to find indictments against any one, except upon full and sufficient testimony, the yelping of snarling curs, detectives, spies, and informers to the contrary notwithstanding.

MOUNT VERNON.

Washington. The regents and vice-regents of the Mount Vernon Association still continue busy at their affairs there. The rainy weather has kept them thus far from their usual visit to and inspection of the entire estate, but that duty will be performed before final adjournment. Letters have been received from the vice-regents who have been unable to attend the council. Some of them endownment fund. The treasurer's report has been received and adopted. The council is still onsidering the very flattering invitation extended them to visit the Yorktown ceremonies. It has been decided to have a session of the association to receive the officers of the French fleet when they visit Mount Vernon after the Yorktown cenennial. Mrs. Yulee has taken a room, to be called the Florida room, on the third floor, adjoining the Connecticut room, and will furnish it. Mrs. Washngton hopes to have the West Virginia room completely restored to its former appearance very soon. She has lately deposited several family by her connection with the family.

A New-Fangled Contribution-Box.

The latest thing originated by churches to eall the wandering sinner home from the land of dreams as the contribution-box is being passed is an electric attachment to the bottom of the box. The sexton goes around with the box, and, if a sinner is asleep or looking the other way, the box is placed against his hand, or ear, or nose, or bald head, or anywhere that the flesh can be touched. You know what a tingling sensation is given when you touch an electric battery. Well, this is the same, or more so, and when a man is once touched with it he remembers where he is forever after. They tried it in a Boston church last Sunday and touched a sleeping deacon on the nose. He threw his head back, struck a woman in the pew back of him, who was standing up to take off her cloak, in the stomach, and then the man struck the sexton. and the woman's escort struck the man whose head hit his wife, and there was a terrible time; but after it was explained the man put half a dollar in the box.-Peck's San.

Sarkacistical on Joaquin Miller.

This office has received Miller's new ook, "The Shadows of Shasta." It glorifies the lousy, thieving, and revengeful savage. Miller affects to be a sort of worshiper of the nightprowling, vermin-ridden, two-faced Indian, who sweats in his greasy rags and wallows in filth the quad hovered around the lobby and sent an | year round. This sort of trash is popular in the East, emissary up to negotiate for an audience, while and Miller makes money by writing it. Whenever endeavored to smoke out the missson of the other | thud, and the eagle becomes a groundhog. His climaxes all work backward. Did not the author wear his hair down over his shoulders and keep cised considerable ingenuity in their efforts to his finger nails dirty he would never pass for a genius. Such a book as his last is worthless, from a literary standpoint, and gives the uninitiated reader false ideas upon the Indian question, which just now is of national importance.-Curson (Nev.)

What a Yacht Is. "Is that a yacht?" was asked of a long,

This report of the Department of State covers all phases of the pork trade-hog raising, feeding, hog eholera (so-called) trichina, the buying, shipping, inspection, and killing of the hogs; the curing, packing, and shipping of the product—in such a direct and posttive manner as to defy successful contradiction.
